INTRODUCTION

Have you wondered how some people just never seem to gain weight? Many people are naturally thin, and sometimes it doesn't seem fair. While some of it certainly has to do with genetics, you will also find that there tend to be many other things these people are doing naturally that have helped them to maintain a sleek physique, all without starving themselves. They can look amazing and still eat things that they like.

In this book, you will learn the secrets to why these people don't gain weight and who you can start to adopt those habits for yourself, so you can become naturally thin, too. Let's check out those 25 secrets and see how you can apply them to your life.

NATURAL SECRETS TO BEING THIN

Below, we will be running through the 25 secrets of naturally thin people that you can start using and adding to your own life today.

Secret #1:

They Tend to Be on the Move

When you look at most people who are naturally thin, you will find that they tend to be extremely active. This doesn't mean that they are out and running marathons or spending all of their time in the gym. However, it means that they tend to not mind walking a few more feet to the grocery store. They take the stairs instead of an elevator. They get out and go hiking or walking for fun. Thinner people tend to do more.

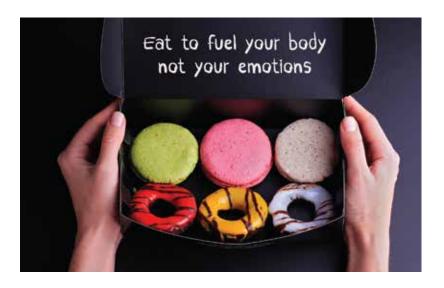

This is something that you can start to emulate. Add more steps to your day, do more work around the house, cut your lawn, etc. Little changes like this and the other secrets in the book can make a big difference.

Secret #2:

They Are Not Emotional Eaters

Many people who are overweight overeat because they let their emotions dictate how they eat and how much they eat. If they are feeling down, overweight people often seek comfort food to make them feel better. If they are feeling great because something wonderful happened, they look to celebrate with food. If they are bored... you get the idea.

Thin people don't rely on their emotions to tell them when to eat or how much they should be eating. Those who want to be thinner should check in on their emotions before they fix their plate.

Secret #3:

They Spend Time Making Their Meals

Thin people tend to spend more time in the kitchen making their own meals. They cook for themselves in many cases, and they know exactly what is going into their food. They aren't ordering fast food all the time, which would provide them with useless and unhealthy calories. Instead, they pick out and cook their food.

They eat better, and they often eat less because of this.

Secret #4:

They Stop Eating When They Feel Full

One of the best secrets of naturally thin people is that they only eat until they are no longer hungry. They eat until they feel full, but not overly full. They trust that their body knows how much food they need, and this allows the body to better maintain itself. When someone overeats and has excess calories, they tend to end up getting stored as fat.

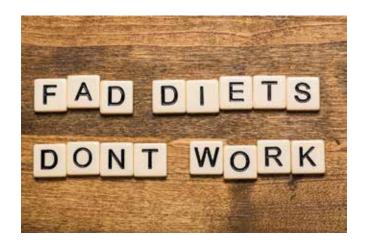

By getting to the point where you only eat until you are satisfied, you will still get the nutrients you need, but you won't have to worry about storing extra calories. Couple this with eating healthier food, as many thin people do, and you can start to see a real difference.

Secret #5:

They Don't Follow Fad Diets

Because naturally thin people are doing most of the things on this list, they don't feel the need to follow the latest fad diet. This is a good thing because many of those fad diets are problematic. They drastically alter the way that a person is eating. They might lose weight for a few weeks, but the loss isn't permanent. When people stop chasing the fad diet, they end up putting on the weight, along with a few added pounds in many cases.

By simply adopting a healthy lifestyle with healthy nutrition, it becomes possible to stay thinner. This is something that thin people tend to do naturally.

Secret #6:

They Have Healthy Food in the Kitchen

Because naturally thin people often do much of their own cooking, they are also doing most of their shopping. This means they are bringing healthier foods into the kitchen, so there is less temptation to eat poorly. They choose vegetables, fruits, lean meats, and healthier sauces. They do not have to deprive themselves of anything that they want, of course, but they often don't feel the need to eat unhealthy food.

Secret #7:

They Eat Dinner Early

Eating too late at night tends not to be good for you. It's better to eat dinner relatively early – at least two or three hours before going to bed. This allows the body to have digested the meal, so they can go into fasting mode until morning.

It also allows the body to burn fat while sleeping.

Secret #8:

They Have Outlets for Fun and Community Other than Food

Another secret to thin people is that they have many other things that they enjoy in their life besides food. They like to get out with their friends and have a good time that doesn't need to involve going out for a meal or drinks. They might be getting together for a game, they might be heading out for a hike, or they might be playing tennis or golf.

They aren't eating, and often, they are getting some additional exercise, which further helps them to stay thin.

Secret #9:

They Don't Eat in Front of the TV or Other Screens

One of the drawbacks of technology in today's society is that it makes it so easy for people to sit and consume a mass amount of food while binging on Netflix, YouTube, or another streaming service. Even watching TV while eating is unhealthy. People who are sitting in front of screens will often eat more food. They often eat unhealthy food, as well.

A study from 2017 that was published in BMC Public Health found that there is a "high prevalence of screen time and unhealthy eating in young adolescents, and that screen time viewing is coupled with unhealthy dietary behaviors."

People who are naturally thin and healthy are eating to get their calories, not to pass the time while watching Stranger Things.

Secret #10:

They Know the Art of Tasting and Not Eating Everything

Thin people might love the taste of many types of food that is considered unhealthy. It might even seem that they can eat anything they want and still stay thin. However, these people are not devouring full cakes and pints of ice cream. Instead, they often take a little taste or two and are satisfied with that. They like the taste, but they don't need to eat the entire slab of cake.

Mastering this is one of the keys to enjoying different types of food without gaining a lot of weight.

Secret #11:

They Eat Slowly

Thin people tend to eat more slowly, as well. They chew the food thoroughly, they drink water, they talk with their friends or family, and they slow down the ingestion process. This not only helps with digestion, but it also makes them feel full faster in many cases. They are satisfied without eating as much because they are eating slowly. For those who are more accustomed to devouring their food quickly, this can be a difficult habit to get into, but it can work wonders.

Research from the International Journal of Behavioral Nutrition and Physical Activity found that there is evidence that eating slowly, while also drinking a sufficient amount of water, can be the "most advisable strategy to maximize satiation and regulate energy intake."

Secret #12:

They Don't Obsess Over Their Weight

Thin people naturally do not obsess over their weight. They aren't weighing themselves each day and counting their calories. They rely on the way they feel and their knowledge of how to eat to guide them – not a number on a scale. Heavier people, on the other hand, tend to spend a lot of time thinking about their weight. This can get them feeling down about themselves, which can lead to falling off the nutritional wagon and eating more than they should.

Secret #13:

They Don't Associate Food with Guilt

People who are thinner do not have the same association with food that many overweight people have. People who are thin look at food as fuel and potentially a nice time out with friends. It's a much healthier relationship with food than what overweight people have. Those who are heavy often feel depressed about food, which can, ironically, make them crave comfort food.

Secret #14:

They Eat a Balanced Diet

Because thinner people are often cooking for themselves, and they opt for healthier meals, they are eating a balanced diet already. They have a nice mix of protein, carbohydrates, and healthy fats in their diet. This ensures they have plenty of energy to keep them active, and it ensures that they aren't eating a lot of wasted calories that could become stored as fat in their body.

Secret #15:

They Limit Desserts

Even though they are naturally thin, many people do not feel the need for dessert. They know that calories in the dessert are filled with sugar that is unhealthy. They might want a taste, and they might have dessert on special occasions, but they don't need it. If anything, they will often opt for fruit over other options.

Limiting dessert can help them to save hundreds of calories for their meals.

Secret #16:

They Limit the Empty Calories of Alcohol

Another source of empty calories is alcohol. Many thin people drink only on occasion, so they aren't plying themselves with calories that will do nothing for them. Having some alcohol now and then is not typically a problem. However, drinking a lot can add hundreds of calories over the course of a week.

All of those calories do nothing to help your health or your goal to be thinner.

Secret #17:

They Listen to Their Bodies

People who are naturally thin are often more in tune with their body, and they listen to their body. When they are hungry, they have something to eat. When they are full, they stop eating. People who are worried about their weight will often try to skip meals or starve themselves believing it will help. Instead, the body starts to horde calories when it has them available, which defeats the purpose and make it more difficult to lose weight.

Listen to your body like those who are naturally thin.

Secret #18:

They Dine Out Wisely

Dining out for thin people isn't about the meal and how much they are going to eat. It's about the experience they are having with family and friends. They don't have to order the biggest or unhealthiest thing on the menu. They only order enough to satisfy themselves. If they order too much, they take it home and have the leftovers the next day. You can do the same. Order healthier items from the menu and don't overeat.

Enjoy the experience of being out more than the food.

Secret #19:

They Eat Breakfast

Breakfast really might be the most important meal of the day. Thin people will often eat a healthy breakfast with eggs, fruit, and similar healthy items. The food helps them to feel satisfied until they reach lunchtime. People who are trying to lose weight and who are skipping breakfast to help with this are not doing themselves any favors. By lunchtime, they are ravenous and end up eating more than they should and/or eating unhealthy foods.

Secret #20:

They Indulge; They Don't Binge

When thin people are craving a certain type of food, they don't deny themselves. Yet, they are still able to remain thin. How do they do this? They indulge their taste buds when they want to, but they don't binge on the food that they buy. They have a little here and there to satisfy the cravings.

People who are heavier and who have denied themselves that treat often overdo it when they have it available.

Secret #21:

They Snack Smarter

Thinner people tend not to have a pantry that's littered with cookies and pastries. Instead of unhealthy snacks that are full of saturated fat and sodium, they have healthier options like popcorn, nuts, simple jerky, and fruits and vegetables. In addition, they do not think of a snack as another meal.

They have just a small amount to tide them over and then move on with their day.

Secret #22:

They Use Fewer Stimulants for Energy

People who are thinner and active have natural energy that they have build up. They don't feel the need to have caffeine, sugar, or nicotine to get the energy they need to get through the day. This keeps them healthier, while it reduces the calories they are eating, and their energy is natural. Many who are not as healthy supplement using caffeine and other stimulants to provide them with some energy. However, these are often empty calories, not to mention they aren't healthy.

Secret #23:

They Like to Look Good in Clothes

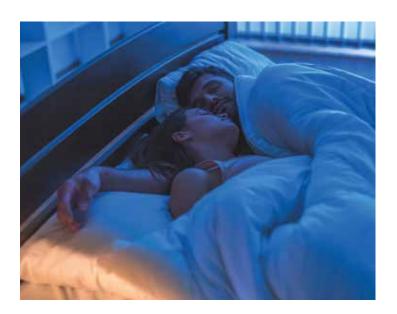

While this might seem vain, it's true. Many thin people do not mind looking at themselves in a mirror, and they are happy that they can fit into all of the clothing that they want. Their goal to look good in clothes can help them to keep on the right track to staying thin. They don't obsess over it, but if they were to notice a change in their body, they would be able to address it quickly.

By considering the things that you want to do, whether it is clothes you want to wear, how you want to look in the mirror or a bathing suit, it can help to keep you on the right track to getting healthier and thinner.

Secret #24:

They Get Plenty of Sleep

People who are thinner often have less trouble sleeping than those who are overweight. They can fall asleep faster, they don't toss and turn as much, and they have plenty of energy for the following day. Getting those eight hours of sleep ensures that they aren't supplementing with sugar or caffeine the next day, which would often just add empty calories to their diet. When you are able to get more sleep, it can help with your health, weight, and energy levels.

It all works in conjunction with one another. When you are sleeping through the night, you have more energy to work out, which can also help you sleep better. The more you work out, the more energy you have. It's a healthy cycle to get into.

Secret #25: They Supplement Wisely

Naturally thin people tend to take care of themselves in other ways. too. They are not only eating well and getting exercise, but they also tend to supplement with smarter options.
